

BGA

Brian Gaddis Architects PLLC

---

January 9, 2013

To Whom It May Concern

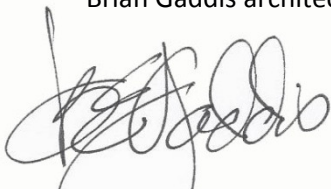

Our company has been involved with Denver Construction over the past seven years and it is my pleasure to recommend them to anyone seeking a professional, well qualified and conscientious general contractor.

With each project Kenneth Tucker and Tracy Reitzel are extremely involved from the beginning to end – and beyond. This is a rarity with General Contractors and we find it to be an enormous asset to our firm and clients. Additionally, the Project Managers are equally qualified, professional and give each of our projects the attention needed for a successful experience.

Inevitably situations present themselves during construction that require clarification from the Architect. This is where the site superintendents with Denver Construction excel at problem solving. We have worked with General Contractors in the past that will take a “what do you want me to do?” attitude. This is not the case with Denver’s superintendents. They immediately take the “may I suggest” approach. I have stated this about Denver in conversations with colleagues in the past and will continue to do so.

In summary, I personally have never worked with a General Contractor that will give a project the attention to detail, budget and schedule. I am proud to recommend them.

Sincerely,
Brian Gaddis architects PLLC

Brian E. Gaddis, RA
Principal